New publication: Epilepsy and child development

Epilepsy is quite common among young women, and studies have shown that children whose mothers have epilepsy are at increased risk of birth defects. Use of older generation antiepileptic drugs has mainly been thought to cause this increased risk. PhD candidate Gyri Veiby, together with colleagues from IGS, has recently published a study in Epilepsia focusing on the effects of anti-seizure medication on cognition during development.
