THE CONFERENCE Winds of Change and Streams of Solidarity: Latin America, the Caribbean, and Europe in the 21st Century aims to focus on the overall common possibilities and challenges for Latin America, the Caribbean, and for Europe in the foreseeable future. The academic committee for the conference has selected four interlinked themes of particular interest for discussion and analysis with water as a transversal theme. In alphabetical order these are: culture and arts; democracy; environment and technology; and health. The conference will gather academics, practitioners, policymakers, civil society, and other stakeholders, trying to advance the conversation, the knowledge, and the insight in order to find joint solutions to common questions.

Panel

Water and resources in the last frontier

Session moderator: Ernesto SEMÁN

Associate Professor, Latin American Studies, University of Bergen

In this panel we will discuss how water has become a critical space in which we make sense of our place in the world and our relations with human and non-human nature, what we create and what we destroy, and why. As Chilean artists Cecilia Vicuña writes, “water wants to be heard”. And for that to happen, humans need an active form of listening. During the last decades, disputes over the meanings and uses of water have been the space for struggles throughout the region, the focus of efforts to turn it entirely into a commodified resource, a space for the sacred, a reservoir of hope in the Anthropocene. The water wars in Bolivia at the turn of the century to the efforts by Norwegian companies to install hydropower plants in Chile, the fracking projects in Colombia, the vanishing of running water in Uruguay, and the transformations of the Paraná River in Argentina into a liquid mega-highway, there is a social life in the making, in the waters. This panel will give us a unique opportunity to listen and discuss different ways in which we are humans in water.

PANELLISTS:

- Machi MILLARAY HUICHALAF, Leader, Mapuche Indigenous commune, Chile
- Yubelis MORALES BLANCO, Social Environmental Leader, Colombia Free of Fracking Alliance (ACLF), Colombia
- Gianfranco SELGAS, Faculty of Arts & Humanities, University College London

Funding and exchange opportunities for Latin America and the Caribbean

14:00-15:00:

Panel

Orientation on opportunities for academic collaboration between Latin America, the Caribbean, and Norway

At the recent EU-CELAC (Community of Latin American and Caribbean States) meeting in Brussels (July 17-18) EU and CELAC agreed on working together to address “the multiple crises and challenges of our times”. Institutions of higher education have a crucial role in providing sound and critical research that can serve as a basis for action in the 21st century. Within the framework of EU-CELAC, an important instrument is the implementation of the bi-regional roadmap and the Joint Initiative for Research and Innovation (JIRI), as well as various other EU programmes. In addition to these instruments, there are specific funding mechanisms from ministries and directorates in Norway. By bringing together representatives from various funding entities, this session will give a brief orientation and introduction to specific ongoing and forthcoming initiatives for supporting R&I collaborative research and educational initiatives between academic partners in Norway and Latin America and the Caribbean. After a brief introduction of some of the main instruments available, there will be a Q&A session between the panel and the conference participants.

Panel moderator: Vibeke KYRKJEBØ IRGAN

Energy transition in the global economy: impacts for Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe

The transition to a greener and fairer economy requires innovation and new ways of thinking. There are many features among emerging technologies in green energy. In this session we will look at a selection of transformations and innovations where science can contribute towards a net zero carbon world with a particular look at and making comparisons between Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe. The session brings together scientists across disciplines to look at some of the most exciting emerging technologies with a particular focus on Latin America and the Caribbean whilst making comparisons to developments in Norway and Europe/EU.

Inequities in health and health systems in Latin America and the Caribbean

Latin America is a culturally and ethnically diverse region with burgeoning economies, striking levels of inequities, and deeply fragmented and segmented health systems. This poses great challenges to the provision of quality care and overall equity levels in Latin American societies and is the result of complex historical, political, and economic determinants, that act regionally, at the country level, and within and across different populations. As a result, the region faces limits to their capacity to provide equitable access to quality healthcare and public health services. It also makes it difficult to guarantee the right to health, a right enshrined in most of the region's constitutions and progressive legal frameworks. Inequities are evident in Latin America's financially strained health systems that are unable to guarantee quality to vulnerable populations like women and girls, the LGBTQ community, indigenous peoples and ethnic minorities, and migrants and refugees. This panel will look at the market, social, and political forces that continue to push towards poorly regulated privatization efforts, in detriment of public healthcare services. To do it, we will discuss health system financing and reform, urban health, and the position of indigenous peoples and women and girls.

PANELLISTS:

- Pablo GAITÁN-ROSSI, Director of the Research Institute for Equitable Development (EQUIDE), Universidad Iberoamericana
- Daniel MACEIRA, Centro de Estudios de Estado y Sociedad (CEDES)/ Facultad de Ciencias Económicas, Universidad de Buenos Aires

Democracy/global order session

12:45-14:00:

Panel

The significance of democracy: Latin America, the Caribbean, Europe, and the global order. What role can Latin America and the Caribbean play in today's uncertain world?

Panel moderator: Pablo VOMMARO

Research Director of CLACSO (Latin American Council of Social Sciences)

Across the world democracy and the global order created by and maintained by liberal nations face serious threats. Democracy as a political system is backsliding in many regions of the world, including in Latin America and the Caribbean where autocratic regimes are on the rise, often supported by voters disgruntled with the poor performance of the democracies of the region. In Europe, war has been raging since Russia's military onslaught of Ukraine. Reactionist movements have gained ground in some European countries. Democratic nations look beyond their frontiers to find friendly partners in defense of democracy, openness, and a rule-based global order. How can Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe grapple with their own internal challenges to democratic rule? What are the similarities and differences in the two regions' challenges to democratic rule? How can Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe work together to strengthen the belief in, and the societal benefit of, democracy? What can be done to expand and improve relations between Europe and Latin America during these turbulent times? These are some of the questions that our panellists will grapple with in this roundtable.

Ignacio Herrera Anchustegui is an Associate Professor at the Faculty of Law of the University of Bergen. He leads the Research Group for Natural Resource Law, Environmental Law and Development Law. Ignacio's area of expertise deals with energy markets, with a special emphasis on the regulation of offshore energy, offshore wind and new energy technologies. His PhD "Buyer Power in EU Competition Law" won the 2017 Concurrences PhD Award for the best doctoral dissertation in the field of competition law or economics, and he has also received the Meltzer Award for Young Researchers 2017 for his academic research and significant contributions at the University of Bergen.

Bert Hoffmann is a Latin America expert at the German Institute for Global and Area Studies (GIGA), Hamburg. Holding a doctorate in political science, he has done extensive research on Latin American and Caribbean politics and the region's international relations. He also is head of the GIGA's Berlin Office and professor of political science at Freie Universität Berlin. As a principal investigator of the German-Latin American Centre of Infection & Epidemiology Research & Training (GLACIER) he is currently leading a comparative study of COVID-19 vaccination policies and politics in Central America and Cuba.

Millaray Huichalaf (31) is a Machi, the spiritual guide and healer of her Mapuche Indigenous commune in the south of Chile. She leads the resistance against Statkraft, a Norwegian state company building hydroelectric plants that could destroy the delicate ecosystem of Pilmaiken, a river that is sacred to her culture. In the context of a long history of predatory colonization and a global climate, economic and health crisis, Machi Millaray's story embodies the moral courage of Indigenous women in defense of natural and spiritual ecosystems, and the struggle of Latin American communities at large for a more equitable region.

Ragnhild Imerslund has been Norway's Ambassador to Mexico and Central America since 2021. She has worked in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs since 2009, was previously the Director of Communication in MFA, Deputy Head of Mission in London and headed successfully Norway's campaign to join the UN Security Council in 2021-2022. Before joining the Ministry of Foreign Affairs she worked in the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for eight years and she also has experience from ICRC and journalism. Ragnhild Imerslund holds a MSc in International Relations from London School of Economics, and has a BA from University of Oslo in Spanish and Journalism.

Vibeke Kyrkjebø Irgan is a senior advisor at UiB Division of Research and innovation and is leading the UiB support team for external funding. The support team specializes in national large-scale proposals such as center and infrastructure projects, and Horizon Europe proposals. In addition to proposal support, the team also offers support in other project phases, such as contract and project management phase. Vibeke Irgan holds a PhD in molecular biology, but has since 2006 been working with research training, internationalization and research support at various faculties and divisions across UiB.

Trine Smukkestad Lavik is an experienced lawyer, graduated from UIB in 2012. She has experience working with energy- and environmental related law, working at the Norwegian Water Resources and Energy Directorate (NVE) from 2013-2016. She has been working as a legal advisor at Innovation Norway's export center since 2016, giving advise to Norwegian companies on EU internal market law. In January she started in a new position as a regional EU-advisor for Innovation Norway Vestland. Trine supports Norwegian companies by offering advisory services when applying for funding from Horizon Europe, mainly the EIC Accelerator program. If you have any questions related to EU-funding, please get in touch: trine.smukkestad.lavik@innovasjon Norge.no

Laila Linde Lossius works at the Norwegian Directorate for Higher Education and Skills, where she manages funding programmes for Higher Educational collaboration between Norwegian institutions and similar institutions in specific countries outside Europe, as Brazil, Canada, China, India, Japan, South-Africa, South-Korea, and USA. Lossius has a master's degree in biology and has worked with fisheries research, engineering education, management of subsea projects in the oil & gas sector and international education collaboration for several years.

Daniel Maceira. PhD. in Economics, Professor at University of Buenos Aires, Independent Researcher of the National Council of Scientific Research (CONICET), Senior Researcher at CEDES, and Director of the MBA-Health, University of San Andrés. Maceira has collaborated with a wide array of institutions, such as IDRC, UNICEF, WHO, PAHO, ECLAC, UNDP, USAid, the Inter-American Foundation (IAF), Gates Foundation, The World Bank, the Global Development Network, the Global Fund; the Inter-American Development Bank; GAVI Alliance, among others. He has numerous national and international peer review publications and coordinated many research projects and technical assistance initiatives particularly in the Latin America. He is Board Member and Chair for The Americas of Health Systems Global.

Deron Maitland is a graduate student in Department of Physics, at The University of the West Indies (Mona), Jamaica. My current PhD project is focused on sea level variability in the Caribbean. This entails looking at the rate of sea level rise in the Caribbean, and the impact it may have on people and the coast in the future. My work aims to provide regional and local sea level rise assessments, which I believe are crucial pieces of information that are required to develop climate models and renewable energy systems that will aid in climate change adaptation and mitigation planning in the Small Island Developing States of the Caribbean.

Leiv Marsteintredet holds a PhD in comparative politics and is professor and Head of Department of the Department of Comparative Politics, University of Bergen. He works on political institutions, constitutional history, and democracy in Latin America. His most recent publication is Latin America in Times of Turbulence. Presidentialism under Stress (Routledge, 2023), which is co-edited with Mariana Llanos. Marsteintredet has written extensively on issues like presidential breakdowns and coups, presidential succession, presidents and vice-presidents, and presidential term limits or reelection rules in Latin America. He is also an expert on Dominican politics and follows Dominican politics closely.

Yuvelis Morales Blanco is a 22-year-old young Colombian socio-environmental leader. Born in Puerto Wilches (Santander), where Ecopetrol and ExxonMobil intend to drill fracking wells, she has fought for the protection of the Magdalena River and the ecosystems that make up the wetlands complex of the Magdalena Medio Region, has collaborated in actions to make visible the problems that extractivism causes in areas of environmental importance, and to promote positive relationships between communities and the territories they inhabit. She is a member of the Alianza Colombia Libre de Fracking and winner of the French award for human rights and environmental defenders "Initiative Marianne".

Håvard Mogleiv Nygård is a Deputy Director-General and Director of the Department of Knowledge of the Norwegian Agency for Development Cooperation, Norad. Dr. Nygård came to Norad from the position of Research Director at the Peace Research Institute Oslo, PRIO. From 2014 to 2021 he was a Senior Researcher, and later Research Director, at PRIO. Dr. Nygård's research focused on the causes and consequences of violence, social order, and development. Gianfranco Selgas. My research focuses on environmental and energy humanities, political ecology, and cultural studies in Latin America and the Caribbean. I am interested in the media and political ecology of nature extraction and energy consumption across the region. My research interests range from late-19th, 20th, and 21st century Latin American and Caribbean cultural production and politics engaging with extractivism to studies on critical theory and material culture with a world-ecological perspective. I am a member of the Petrocultures Research Group and collaborate with CLACSO's working group on Political Ecology. More about my research, teaching, and other projects here: www.gianfrancoselgas.com.

Ernesto Semán. I am a historian working on Latin America. I am more recently the author of "Breve historia del antipopulismo los intentos por domesticar a la argentina plebeya, de 1810 a Macri" (SigloXXI, 2021) and "Ambassadors of the Working Class. Argentina's International Labor Activists and Cold War Democracy in the Americas" (Duke, 2017). Currently, my research focuses on social and environmental issues: from the uses of animal metaphors in politics to an etymology of "resource". Particularly, I work on the history of salmon farming in Chile, as a field of experimentation for transnational capital flows, labor regulations, environmental changes and a reconceptualization of the relation between human and non-human nature.
